My PhD Project

This doctoral project captures the significant changes related to societal ageing, the digital health advances and their interaction with the law. It focuses on the regulatory approaches of health data governance in the EU and China in the tide of digital health transformation. In essence, this doctoral dissertation entails a comparative legal study between the health data governance legal framework of the European Union (EU) and that of China, in the context of using digital technologies for health-related purposes, such as assisted living.

- First, it aims to examine and map out the legal approaches of the EU and China in relation to health data protection and usage. This includes investigating a broad range of legal regulations, such as the GDPR, draft AI Act, draft EHDS, and the Chinese PIPL.
- Second, it intends to make a comparative study between the legal approaches of the EU and that of China regarding their legal governance of health data.
- Thirdly, it investigates whether other forms of regulation or updates are necessary and how can laws be made better.
